

With the Varsity in front and JV in back, the group participates in a cheer. This year it is mandatory for each cheerleader to lead 5 cheers per game.

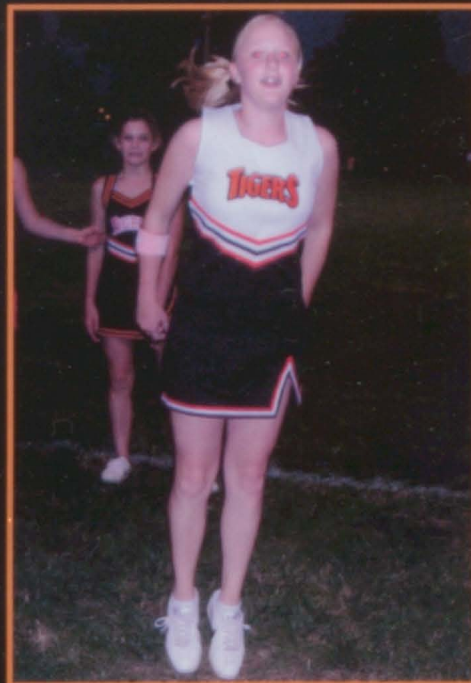

In her new outfit Barbra Hartman leads the cheer "Boogie Down."

The middle school squad has fun with the cheer "Elevate your mind". In this cheer the girls are able to communicate with each other while holding hands.

The JV and Varsity team combine as one squad as they walk across the field. Each member is wearing her Tigers cheerleading jacket which she receives once she makes tryouts.

Molly Allison jumps during one of the cheers she leads.

"A lot of things are different this year. Camp came to us and we learned new cheers such as our hello cheer."
-Stephanie Miller

"Since there are no tryouts or cuts for middle school more girls are getting a chance to be a cheerleader which adds to the fun."
-Danielle Marsh

"I liked the fact that we didn't have to purchase the uniforms out of our own pockets."
-Jackie Swartz

MARCHING BAND

The 2004-2005 Tiger Marching Band started their season being told they would have to memorize their sheet music for field performances. Kozina hoped this would free their minds to memorize the new and more difficult moves he wanted to incorporate into their marching shows. Parade routines were impacted as bystanders watch band members spin, kick, and lean as they marched the parade route. New for this year they slide back and forth.

In addition to the show changes, beret colors were introduced to distinguish between squad leaders, drum majors, and band members. The orange berets represented squad leaders and sergeants. The white berets were reserved for the junior and senior Drum Majors, keeping the black berets signifying band members.

Another pleasant surprise for band members was the lock-in. At the end of the marching season band members got together in the High School gym for the night to play games and hang out. With all of the changes that were made, band members kept good spirits, and it is no surprise that the bands new motto became: We Play With Pride!

The Tiger Marching Band sets down their instruments and picks up their dancing shoes. Getting down to the beat of the Drum Line. The crowd stands and applauds.

TIGER HALL OF FAME

In September, four new members were added to the Tiger Hall of Fame. They were Ryan Clark, (baseball), Jason Doering, (basketball), Bery Hemminger, (coaching/athletic advisor), and Ron Rader, (baseball). The members were nominated by the community members and voted in by the Athletic Council. In addition to the induction of new members, a new display case was purchased to display Hall of Fame members. It is located in the lobby down by the band room. This case was purchased with the generous donations of the community, sports boosters, and school. A plaque has been mounted on the wall naming those who made donations.

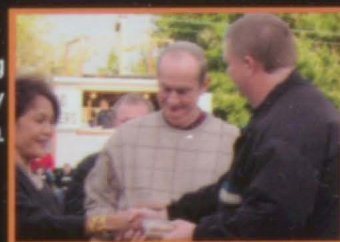

This year marks the 20th, 25th, 70th, and 80th anniversaries of North Baltimore High School State Championships. New banners were hung in the gym and presented to the community at a home basketball game on February 4, 2005. We honor those who have succeeded before us.

Ryan Clark earned his place in the Tiger Hall of Fame by playing semi-pro baseball for the Yankees.

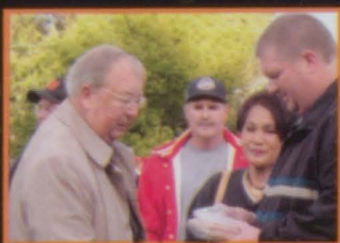

Mr. and Mrs. Doring accepting their sons award. They are very proud of him.

Long time Athletic Director and coach, Beryl Hemminger, was admitted for his many years of service to North Baltimore High School.

Ron Rader gladly accepts his award from Athletic Director, Tony Mulholland.

Homecoming King Ryan Boyer gives Homecoming Queen Vanessa Gazarek a kiss on the cheek as he congratulates her at the Fall Homecoming ceremony. The game was held October 1, 2004, against St. Wendelin. The boys knocked off the Mohawks with a 52-14 victory.

The 2004 Fall Homecoming week was full of changes along with everything else this year. There was a parade held before the game as well as the crowning of the King and Queen. During the week, the students and staff dressed up for each of the spirit days and were competing to win an award for the most spirited given at the pep assembly. Brandon Meyer took the award for most spirited male, and Shanda Myers took it for most spirited female. The theme of the parade was "Smells Like Team Spirit", which was used to coordinate with the playing of "The Band" which consisted of four high school students who played the song "Smells Like Teen Spirit" by Nirvana for their fellow students here at N.B.H.S. Each grade was assigned a sport to cover for the parade to help support the theme of homecoming. This was one of the only years a theme was actually carried out through the week. The Kiss-the-Pig contest winners were Ryan Boyer and Vanessa Gazarek, who also were crowned the 2004 Fall Homecoming King and Queen. The Homecoming Dance was held immediately after the game, which was a downfall, but the students worked with it and made the dance a hit. Overall the week went well and the students looked forward to Winter Homecoming.

Sarah Phillips, Sara Glamm and Samantha Austin have fun participating in the well known dance, The Macarena.

Jessica Kyttle, Scott Stengel, Amber Noykos, and Caitria Clark have a blast dancing at the Fall Homecoming Dance.

Due to the many changes this school year, the annual Powder Puff game was almost put to a stop. Many students refused to participate because the school board decided that the teams needed to be combined of Junior and Seniors, rather than Juniors vs. Seniors. In the end, the teams were randomly selected and divided into the Black Team and the White Team. The Black Team came out with a 18-12 victory over the White Team.

White Team

This year's Student Council started with renewed determination to help ease the tension between students and administration as they began the year with a new process of voting for class officers and council members. In previous years, students who wanted to run for student council or class officer positions had to fill out a form. The form had to be signed by ten other students in their grade, and they also had to have two teachers sign it. The students who completed the paper and turned it in would be on the ballot, and were able to run for both student council and class officer. This year students still had to fill out a paper stating what position they would like to run for; however, they ran as representatives of precincts rather than representatives of their grade. They also had to choose whether they wanted to run for student council or class officer.

The A.A.'s were grouped into eight precincts. Only two representatives were elected from each precinct. One represents the juniors and seniors and one represents the freshman and sophomores. The Middle School students also elected one representative from each of the three precincts. In addition to the elected student council members, each class's vice president represents their grades as an appointed student council member. Many students put up posters and a couple of the candidates even stood up and gave speeches at lunch during the week of campaigning.

Student council met the first and third Wednesday of each month to address students concerns. Student Council officers ran the meeting while the advisor made sure parliament procedures were followed correctly.

Amber Noykos was very excited about running for student council and wanted everyone to know by making a poster.

In precinct number three, Ella Houck receives her voting ballot from Mrs. Garner. "I disagree with the way voting went this year," says Ella.

Eric Hutchison stops to promote his campaign for senior class president by showing off his shirt that he made for him and his friends to wear.

Tyler Simon and Josh Eichar take their time to vote while Eric Phillips waits to vote at Precinct number one. Mrs. Wronkovich-Clark's A.A. made the voting booth.

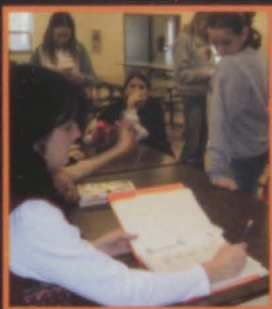

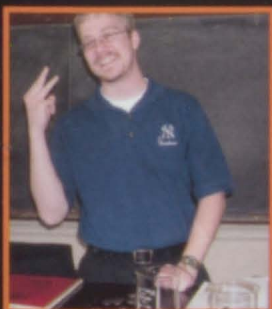

Barbra Hartman, Baley Delancy, and Aryn Bucher show their team spirit by painting their faces with "OSU".

Mr. Gilman counts the change his students brought in for the penny stall that's sponsored by MAL Leadership.

Advisor Shelly Simon takes attendance for the first MAL Leadership meeting of the year.

Mr. Ellis counts out loud as his seventh period prayed they had enough money to stall the class.

Second Row: Maddie Clark, Audra Rensch, Sara Glamm, Vanessa Gazarek, Maria Huff, Josh Eichar.
Third Row: Bri Rensch, Robbie Hamlin, Mrs. Simon, Andrew Williams, and Mallory Perry.

Shelly Simon brought new and improved changes to MAL leadership this year. New members, along with the continuing members, must show leadership on and off the field, have good grades, and a good behavior record. The coaches submit names of athletes who exhibit good leadership skills on their teams. Mrs. Simon and Mr. Mulholland evaluate them and select new members. Maria Huff, Mallory Perry, Bri Rensch, Michael Ishmael, Andrew Williams, Robbie Hamlin, Barbra Hartman, and Baley Delancy were this year's selected members.

There were some additional activities MAL leadership started this year. During football's homecoming week, MAL sold orange mum's for fans to show their school spirit, and they sponsored the Michigan and Ohio State day, where teachers and students sported their favorite teams wear. The most spirited Ohio State or Michigan fan won a big candy bar.

Other activities that MAL leadership sponsored this fall included the penny stall. During selected periods every week for several weeks students brought in their loose change hoping to delay class as teachers counted the money. Another activity they sponsored was the Angel tree where, they raise money to buy gifts for children in the North Baltimore area. They also provided a teacher appreciation dinner during parent-teacher conference week, which came right before Thanksgiving.

Mr. Zamudio and Mrs. Sanford stand in front of Brutus the Buckeye which is located in Mr. Zamudio's classroom for the Ohio State and Michigan game.

Eric Hutchison does his part working at the food pantry for MAL leadership.

MAL Leadership president Vanessa Gazarek addresses advisor Shelly Simon with issues about the best seat in the house couch.

Mr. Rowlinson counts pennies as it stalls his 7th period class from starting.

Be The Change

CHALLENGE DAY

Challenge Day is a program to help students get to know their classmates better. Another goal is to make the school, as a whole, a better place for students. The freshman and sophomore classes attended this special event together. Group leaders, consisting of teachers and community members came an hour early for a meeting to learn what the day would be based on and what the program had planned for the students to learn.

The main leaders were Cherine and Vinnie. They travel to many different schools trying to change the way young people view each other. They want to spread the message that people are always there for you even if you don't believe they are. They started the morning by having students play a few games helping students get comfortable with each other. Then students had to find someone they didn't talk to much and share with their partner things that nobody knew about them. This helped them to form trust with this person. Next the students all came together and listened to the life stories of Cherine and Vinnie. Neither of them had easy lives. They learned a few techniques to be more understanding of others. They talked about "dropping the water line", and sharing true feelings. For the guys in the room, they talked about "stepping outside the man box".

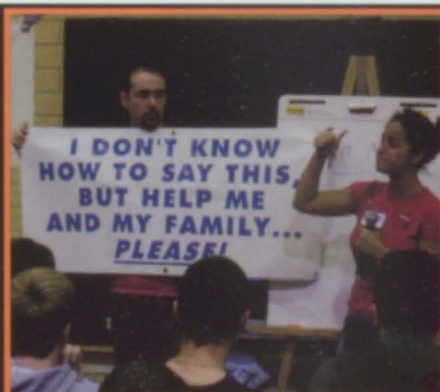

Next, the students played a number game to get into groups of five or six. They shared many important details about themselves during group time which met sporadically throughout the day and for lunch. The students got to know more about each other and more about the leader of the group. Participants also got to break away from the groups and just talk to people they normally didn't talk to.

The most emotional part of the day came in the afternoon. Everyone got in a line as Cherine read off a statement, and if it applied to your life, you walked across the line and faced all your classmates who did not have to deal with that problem. The statements included deaths of family members, racial backgrounds, and derogatory names one might have been called. Students found out that they were not alone, as many students, and leaders crossed the line, many times.

Later in the afternoon each person took time to write a card to an important person in his/her life. It was supposed to be like their last words to that person. The day ended by taping posters to the students' backs and running around letting others write positive things about each other on the poster.

Mrs. Head, Jessica Kyttle, Ms. Brown, and other leaders dance around in a huge circle to get people energized and ready to learn about each other at Northwood.

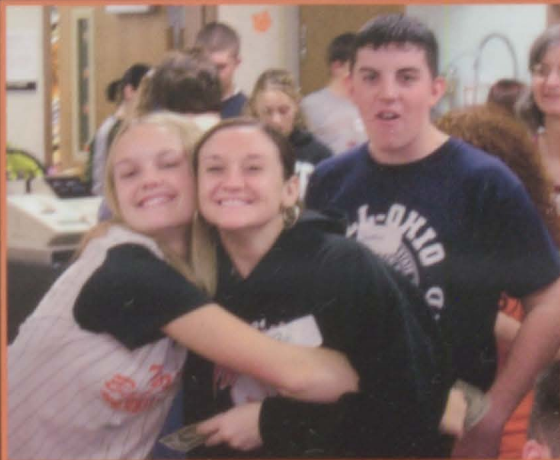

There were many sessions at Challenge Day. Students got into groups of five or six to talk about struggles in their lives, as well as coming together to talk about ways to improve communications, such as "dropping the water line" and "stepping outside the man box".

Far left: Alex Hogan shows his moves to the group of challenge day participants. "I was scared but I was having fun," Alex admits.

Left: Maddie Clark and Bri Rensch share a hug to show their love and support for each other. They were in true spirit of Challenge Day.

Below left: All the community leaders came together at 7:30 am to learn the concept of Challenge Day. They prepared themselves to help change some students lives.

North Baltimore Leaders go to Northwood

A selected group of teachers and students joined other staff and student leaders at Northwood to be trained to continue leading the change throughout our homes and schools.

While there, the students found trustworthy new friends and learned new skills to make them successful leaders in our schools.

Above Right: Eric Phillips stands in front of the crowd and feels a little scared because they were shouting out names he may have been called growing up. Then they listed Eric's good qualities.

Left: Reuben Torres stands up to share that his partner Cassie likes spinach.

Mr. Rowlinson shows off his white man dance in front of everyone at Northwood, trying to loosen others up as he gave a few laughs.

Far Left: Lindsay Henry and Ryan Herringshaw share a moment of honesty. Lindsay told Ryan her true feelings about their old friendship, which made her cry.

Left: Cherine and Vinnie pose for a picture so North Baltimore could remember the two people who challenged them to "BE THE CHANGE".
